ACC Command chief bids farewell

By Tech. Sgt. B. Coors-Davidson 355th Wing Public Affairs

Chief Master Sgt. Daniel Keane visited Davis-Monthan Air Force Base Tuesday for the final time as the command chief master sergeant for Air Combat Command before his retirement in July.

The chief was appointed to the position in March 2000 and retires with more than 27 years of service, taking him to 13 permanent-party assignments and five countries as well as countless deployments.

"I think retiring would be difficult at any time, and I would wait till I was 65 if I could," Keane said. "But, it's time to move on and make room for another to move up and take on the responsibilities as command chief."

During his tenure as ACC command chief, Keane served as advisor to the

Morgan said he's tired of seeing all the anti-war publicity and wants to let the military know they have support. "You can protest the war all you want," said Morgan. "Don't protest the soldiers."

D-M hosts 450,000 spectators at Aerospace & Arizona Days 2003

Davis-Monthan Air Force Base hosted 450,000 spectators from D-M, Tucson, Ariz., and the surrounding areas Saturday and Sunday for Aerospace & Arizona Days 2003.

The airshow was more than a show for entertainment, it was an proximately 30 maneuvers and opportunity for D-M to show the Tucson community what happens on the base and welcome them to show their support for the airmen, soldiers, seamen and Marines currently deployed in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom.

This year's show also celebrated

The United States Air Force Thunderbirds headlined A&A Days 2003. The show by the Thunderbirds lasted approximately 30 minutes both days. Their performances consisted of apwere a big hit with the crowd.

"We came to the airshow to see the Thunderbirds for the first time," said Eligio Apataca, a Tucson resident.

In the 50 years since the inception of the squadron more than 315 million people in all 50 states and 60 foreign countries have witnessed the performances.

Though the Thunderbirds were the pinnacle of the airshow, they weren't alone in entertaining all 450,000 guests.

Many performers from various backgrounds performed at the airshow. Military and civilians alike teamed to produce the show.

"The A-10 explosions are my favorite part," said Matt Hollingsworth, an airshow spectator, in reference to the West Coast A-10 Demonstration Team, stationed at the 355th Wing here.

If for some reason the pass appears to be altered, mutilated, expired, or not authenticated, the pass is taken and the visitor is requested to proceed to the visitor control center to obtain a new pass. For now the system is secure. However, I want to praise you for taking the time to get involved. All of us need to keep our eyes and ears open. Thanks again.

Security and respect

Comment: I have a concern about the security at the Craycroft Road Gate. I noticed that at reveille, all the gate guards turn and face the flag and render a salute while nobody's eyes are pointed outside the gate. Given the way the traffic pattern is, it would be easy for anyone to get through. I think this security issue should be addressed.

Response: Thank you for your concern about security at our installation control points. Not only do we have vigilant security force personnel posted outside the 80 percent windowed gate guard building, but we have personnel posted within the building who maintain watch of all approaching traffic. It may seem an inconvenience to drivers, the issue is actually a matter of respect for "Old Glory" and our security forces personnel will hold traffic to render same.

New shoppette music

Comment: I just gassed up at the new shoppette on base. They have music blaring out through their speakers and I don't think they should be doing that. You have to be very focused about what you are doing here and it is an accident waiting to happen. It is not right at a gas station.

Team D-M Mission Spotlight

The 355th Civil Engineer Squadron's primary peacetime responsibility is maintaining Davis-Monthan Air Force Base's runway and critical flight facilities in support of the flying mission. They are also involved in the planning, programming, design and construction management of various operations and maintenance programs done by civilian contractors. CES manages and maintains 1,239 individual family housing units and works in close liaison with the Army Corps of Engineers on military construction projects. The Fire Protection Flight falls under CES. It is a dedicated team of professional fire fighters, acting in partnership with the D-M community to accomplish the 355th Wing mission through elimination of loss of life or property due to fire, accident or disaster. It is ready, willing and able to provide quality fire protection services through education, prevention, engineering and fire fighting activities.

AF revises standards geared toward body modifications and mutilations

The Air Force revised personal appearance guidelines in response to a trend involving extreme body modification and mutilation that is becoming common among a small, yet growing segment of the population, according to personnel officials.

This change is in Air Force Instruction 36-2903, Dress and Personal Appearance of Air Force Personnel.

The change in the instruction prohibits airmen from intentionally altering or modifying their bodies in order to achieve a visible effect that disfigures, deforms or otherwise detracts from a professional military image, said Lt. Col. Frank Pombar, chief of the Air Force quality of life programs and uniform branch at the Pentagon.

"The Air Force is doing exactly what it should be doing: defining standards on quality-of-life issues for our airmen," said Senior Master Sgt. Ronald Mansfield, 755th Operations Support Squadron first sergeant.

"We are paid by the taxpayers of the United States and we are responsible to them to display a positive and professional image," said Senior Master Sgt. Franklin Roznovsky, 355th Logistics Readiness Squadron first sergeant.

Although Pombar believes very few airmen will actually be impacted by this policy clarification, it will benefit recruiters, first sergeants, commanders and airmen.

"For some time now, recruiters have been seeing a growing number of people with extreme body alterations or piercings," he said. "Without specific guidance, recruiters often had to rely on personal opinion or taste to make a decision as to what was or was not appropriate."

However, this change to the AFI is not a checklist, nor is it intended to tie the hands of Air Force officials, Pombar said.

The goal is to establish broad guidance to assist commanders, first sergeants, recruiters, supervisors and airmen in determining what is or is not acceptable and professional, he explained.

The change in the AFI gives the commanders more room to handle situations as they deem appropriate. Administrative or disciplinary action will be left up to the discretion of each commander if they feel airmen have done something to themselves that might detract from their professional military image.

"This policy allows for some flexibility, but if anyone is considering some type of body modification or physical alteration procedure, they should talk to their first sergeant or commander before making a decision," Pombar said.

The bottom line is that there are certain appearance standards that the service and the nation expects airmen to adhere to, and therefore Air Force people must always strive to conduct themselves in a professional manner, he said.

The Air Force is not the only armed service that has considered changing its policy or guidance on dress and personal appearance.

The other services are seeing the same types of modifications and are beginning to adopt policies similar to those the Air Force has implemented, he said.

"Those who have heartburn with the prohibitions should have their service terminated," said Roznovsky.

"We have to be disciplined, and that means we have to follow orders as well as [Air Force Instructions] placed over us," Roznovsky added.

"Hopefully we have created a useful guideline that will let everyone know what the Air Force standard is and what is expected of all men and women wearing the Air Force uniform," Pombar said. (Courtesy Air force Personnel Center).

After first week of war, airmen charged, ready for what may come

By Master Sgt. Chuck Roberts

Air Force Print News

With the first week of Operation Iraqi Freedom successfully waged, 40,000 airmen spread across 30 locations stand poised for the long and difficult road ahead.

But to airmen such as Senior Airman Jennifer Raney, the duration of the journey is secondary to dispelling the regime of Saddam Hussein.

"I'm just very proud to be here, and in my small way to fight for freedom," said Raney, an aerospace ground equipment maintainer assigned to the 380th Air Expeditionary Wing. She spoke in a telephone interview from her deployed location. "I'm very proud to do my part, every day, no matter how long it takes."

Although she plays only a small role in the nonstop air war, Raney said, the Whittier, N.C.. native feels deep pride for such a massive undertaking — more than 4,800 sorties alone during the first five days of the operation.

The war effort will not be quick or easy, according to Gen. Richard Myers, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. President George Bush also warned against expectations of an easy victory. During a March 26 visit to U.S. Central Command headquarters at MacDill Air Force Base, Fla., the president reminded Americans "this war is far from over" but "we will stay on the path, mile by mile, all the way to Baghdad and all the way to victory. ... Day by day, the Iraqi people are closer to freedom."

The war could be long, but it got off to a fast start. Coalition "shock air forces" opened the air campaign with more than 2,000 sorties on the first night, and have averaged about 1,000 per night since, according to officials.

For the first time in combat, precision-guided munitions were used exclusively to minimize collateral damage while targeting a large number of military sites. In comparison, less than 10 percent of the munitions used in Operation Desert Storm in 1991 were precision-guided.

Aircraft sorties originated from as far away as Whiteman Air Force Base, Mo., the Indian Ocean and England, plus being flown from 30 locations throughout U.S. Central Command's area of responsibility and five Navy aircraft carriers. B-2 Spirits flew the longest missions, lasting approximately 34 hours.

Tanker pilots such as Capt. Richard Peterson at the 321st Air Expeditionary Wing provided the legs for aircraft to reach the fight. The KC-135 Stratotanker pilot said his life has been a nonstop series of "fly, crew rest and time to go again." The reservist from Tinker Air Force Base, Okla., said missions routinely stretched from seven to nine hours supporting bombers, fighters and surveillance aircraft hungry for

The pace is long and hard, but pilots prefer staying busy, said Peterson, who flew the A-10 Thunderbolt II during Operation Allied Force in 1994.

"We don't want to be sitting around," said Peterson of his fellow reserve pilots who normally fly for commercial airlines. "As a whole we're very excited. Everybody is pretty fired up and glad to be doing what we're doing."

Another critical player who keeps aircraft flying is Airman 1st Class Joshua Brown, a computer systems operator at the 321st AEW who provides computer access for the wing. "No comm, no bomb" is the motto communications troops like to quote.

The Erie, Pa., native was in junior high school during the 1991 Gulf War. He kept up with daily events because his uncle was fighting with the Army. He said he knew then he wanted to be a part of the military. Brown was to report for basic training on Sept. 11, 2001. Because of the terrorist attacks, basic training was put on hold for a week.

Now Brown's life is somewhat on hold as he puts in nonstop 12-hour days, seven days a week. But he is not complaining. Brown said he has learned more in one month downrange than in a year at Minot Air Force Base, N.D.

"I'm proud to be over here and defending our nation," Capt. Chadd Kobielush of the 401st AEW said. "It's rewarding helping the people of Iraq as a pilot refueling coalition aircraft.

But he also said he knows what he is doing extends beyond the boundaries of Iraq.

"It motivates you more when you feel like you're helping out the folks back home. As long as we can neutralize Saddam Hussein, that's a good blow to the enemies of America," said Kobielush, who is deployed from Royal Air Force Mildenhall, England.

As a boom operator for the 401st AEW, Staff Sgt. Joel Jones said he also feels the pride of being part of Operation Iraqi Freedom. Jones, whose dad was also a boom operator, said the hardest part is being away from his family, but he said he knows he is there for the right cause — "to free Iraq."

Raney agrees.

"Now, it feels like we came here to get justice for the lives we lost Sept. 11. Every day at home, this is what we go to work for. This is ultimately why we're in the military," she said.

The Retired Aviators Recall Program was extended to Sept. 30. 2008, in order to fill rated staff headquarters requirements.

According to Lt. Col. James Mont, Air Force Personnel Center Rated Recall Program chief, the Air Force has been authorized the recall of up to 208 retired aviators.

Retired aviators will be primarily used to fill headquarters rated staff positions above wing level.

"The original program was set up in 1999 and was supposed to expire October 2003," said Mont. "But we realized our shortage of aviators would extend beyond that date."

The program came into effect because there is a shortage of rated staff officers.

It is designed to allow retired lieutenant colonels and below to volunteer to come back on active duty and fill some of the vacancies without being limited to maximum years of service in their respective lieutenant colonels on the street, grade.

"I volunteered to come back in because the service asked," said Lt. Col. Martin Kahao, 612th Com-rently recalled into the program.

bat Plans Squadron senior program analyst.

"Originally I retired in July of 1999. I came back in July of 2001 and I will have a total of 30 years time in service this July," he added.

The program benefit those who come back in because their retirement pay will increase the longer they are on active duty.

This program does more than benefit the individuals who wish to come back in, however. The Air Force needs them.

"You can't just find majors and and you can't grow them," said Kahao.

Kahao is one of 204 officers cur-

The Air Force sent him a letter of invitation to come back in beyond his high year of tenure.

"It's a great program for the Air Force because it offers us instant experience," said Mont. "It allows the Air Force to take people back with more than 20 years of experience." And experience is what the Air Force is looking for.

Although multiple benefits are apparent from this program, it doesn't come without conflicts.

"The security clearances have been a real challenge for us," said Mont. "After a member has been retired for more than two years, they lose any clearance they might have had. That means we have to start from scratch to get a new clearance." Because security clearances can be a lengthy and uncomfortable process, it is one of the few draw backs of the program. But it doesn't keep people out of it.

"I know of an officer who had been retired for more than five years, yet came back in through this program because of our need," said Mont.

Those interested in applying for the Retired Aviator Recall Program should submit their contact information by accessing the AFPC Web site at www.afpc.randolph. af.mil.

"My son wants to be a pilot one day," said Robert Mangen, airshow guest, "that's what brings us out."

One of the benefits of airshows is the potential for recruiting. Families come to airshows and have the opportunity to see what is offered by the Air Force, its bases, its servicemembers and experience firsthand a taste of the military and what flying is all about.

"It seems there's a lot less people because of the circumstances," said Mangen.

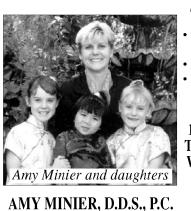

Airshow attendance possibly suffered due to the conflict currently taking place in the Middle East, but that didn't stop people from coming onto D-M and enjoying the weekend with servicemembers and their families.

The lack of attendance didn't affect the guests' enjoyment, however.

"This is our first airshow," said Dave and Deb Schneider, airshow attendees. "If there's an airshow next year, we won't miss it."

Consider what you've been through - a highly selective weeding-out process, basic training, schools and the best on-the-jobtraining in the world.

Military service asks more of you than any civilian organization out there. How can you not change?

Let's see what kind of person you are right now. How's your outlook on politics? Having been there and done that, I'd expect you have pretty strong ideas on what your government (or anyone else's) is up to.

Do you feel like you have a much better handle on what's going on around you? Do you have a more global, informed perspective?

If you're thinking right now that I'm full of it – let's get a little closer to home. Are you more of a patriot? I know I am!

For all its warts and pimples, the United States is by far the most wonderful, progressive, and freedom-loving country in the world. Think of the oppressive nations you've studied, visited, lived in or fought in. I know you can muster up a little pride in the good of United States!

How about self-discipline? There's nothing like four hours of sleep a night, up well before dawn, showering in 30 seconds, and finishing breakfast before 5:30 a.m. to appreciate the benefits of time management.

Remember basic training? Can you handle adversity, show a lot of flexibility?

Of course, these self-improvements may seem somewhat intangible, but they're not.

What is your favorite pastime and why?

The changes in you are real, concrete, and obvious.

The best measure of how far you've come is when you go home on vacation. Your old pal Billy

Bob (or Betty Bob) is still pumping gas, while you've fought wars, been to a half-dozen countries. lived overseas and learned lifelong skills. Do you really hang with the Billy Bobs anymore, or have you moved on to a bigger and better circle?

Granted, some folks make the transition quickly, others still have a way to go, but by and large, we are a community of movers and shakers.

I had the experience of working in the civilian world for about five years before joining up, and I can confirm that we do more before 9 a.m. than the rest of the world does all day! How's that for a commercial?

After all this hype, if you don't think you're a better person, I know some people who do. They're the folks outside the gate.

Believe it or not, the servicemember really does represent the American ideal. And if I don't have you yet, wait till it's time to look for a job outside the Air Force.

If it's a choice between a world-smart, educated individual who stands up straight and tall versus a snaggletooth longhair, I know who I'd choose! When you leave, regardless of years in service, I can guarantee that you'll own the world. There's nothing you can't do.

So if you are ever in a "What's the Air Force done for me lately?" kind of mood, take a look in the mirror. You might be surprised at how far you have come!

Goals: To get the most experience possible in the field of training dogs

Hobbies/outside activities:

41st NCO helps mission, his mural helps facilitate unit pride

Staff Sgt. John Alsvig (photo inset), 355th Component Maintenance Squadron aircraft fuel systems craftsman, designed and painted the mural (left). Alsvig, who recently returned from a deployment to Southwest Asia, completed the mural on a blast wall, which is used to deflect jet wash from the camp, surrounding the perimeter of the flightline at the deployed location. The wall has more than 40 other murals from different units, said Alsvig.

Living the Air Force core values (integrity first, excellence in all we do and service before self), Alsvig excelled in his job and went above and beyond to create a mural to reflect unit pride. "With 10 John Alsvigs alone, we could win this war fast," said Lt. Col. Don Bacon, 41st Expeditionary Electronic Combat Squadron. "He's done a lot."

The impact of the mural will "hopefully be a positive one. Pride in one's unit goes a long way, especially under the conditions we were in," said Alsvig. "Being deployed puts a lot of things in focus. Some of which include the importance of your co-workers and the mission. Seeing all the other murals gives you a sense of how diverse our military is. Seeing your own along side the others gives you pride of serving in such diversity. All the branches of service, including the Air National Guard, Air Force Reserve and were represented. [Air National Guard], [Air Force Reserve] and all the specialties you could think of from security forces to services and Red Horse, civil engineers.

"Seeing our own unit on the wall every day during jogs or supply runs definitely gave us a sense of esprit de corps." (Courtesy photos)
